

Flash pyrolysis appears to be economically more efficient than gasification or combustion for valorising the small amount of willow that is expected to be harvested during phytoremediation in the Belgian Campine. Cost-benefit analysis and risk analysis have been performed, by means of Monte Carlo simulations and experimental design.